

Name - Subhradip Sinha
Roll Number - 10000122057
Registration Number - 221000112121
Subject - HSMC
Course - B.Tech Computer Science & Engineering

HSMC-CA3

What are the points you need to address while introducing yourself?

What is the knowledge that you require to face the salary negotiation round of an interview successfully?

What are the points you need to address while introducing yourself?

When introducing yourself, whether in a professional setting, social gathering, or interview, it's important to cover key points clearly and concisely. Here's a structured approach:

Greeting & Name

Start with a polite greeting (e.g., "Hello," "Good morning").

Clearly state your name (e.g., "My name is [Your Name]").

Background (Professional/Educational)

Mention your current role or profession (e.g., "I am a [Job Title] at [Company]").

If a student, state your field of study (e.g., "I'm pursuing a degree in [Subject] at [University]").

Relevant Experience/Skills

Highlight key skills or expertise (e.g., "I specialize in [Skill/Area], with [X] years of experience").

Mention notable achievements if relevant (e.g., "I've led projects in...").

Personal Touch (Optional but Engaging)

Share a hobby, passion, or fun fact (e.g., "Outside work, I enjoy [Activity]").

Keep it professional yet relatable.

Purpose/Connection

Explain why you're introducing yourself (e.g., "I'm here to..." or "I'm excited to be part of...").

If networking, express interest in others (e.g., "I'd love to learn more about...").

Closing

End politely (e.g., "Thank you," "Looking forward to our conversation").

Example:

"Hi, I'm Alex. I'm a Marketing Manager at XYZ Corp, specializing in digital strategy with 5 years of experience. Outside work, I love hiking and photography. I'm excited to be here today to connect with fellow professionals in the industry. Thanks for having me!"

What is the knowledge that you require to face the salary negotiation round of an interview successfully?

Successfully navigating a salary negotiation during an interview requires a combination of research, strategy, and communication skills. Here's the key knowledge you need to secure the best possible offer:

Know Your Market Value

Research salary ranges for your role, industry, and location using:

Glassdoor, Payscale, LinkedIn Salary Insights

Industry reports (e.g., Robert Half Salary Guide)

Networking (ask peers or recruiters discreetly)

Adjust for experience, skills, and company size (startups vs. Fortune 500).

Understand the Company's Compensation Structure

Is the company known for high base salaries, bonuses, or equity?

Are there non-negotiable policies (common in govt. or large corps)?

Check if they disclose salary bands in the job description.

Define Your Salary Range (Anchor High)

Have a minimum acceptable salary (walk-away point).

Provide a range (e.g., "I'm targeting

90

K

—

90K–110K based on market data and my expertise").

Always start at the higher end to leave room for negotiation.

Delay Discussing Salary Until Necessary

Avoid stating numbers first—politely deflect:

"I'd like to understand the full scope of the role first."

"I'm flexible based on the total compensation package."

If forced, give a wide range or say you're "open to competitive offers."

Justify Your Ask with Evidence

Highlight unique skills, achievements, or certifications.

Use data: "According to [source], the market rate for this role in [city] is $X."

Show impact: "In my last role, I improved [metric] by Y%, so I believe this justifies Z salary."

Negotiate Beyond Base Salary

If the salary is fixed, negotiate:

Bonuses, stock options, or profit-sharing

Flexible hours, remote work, or extra PTO

Signing bonus, relocation assistance, or training budgets

Handle Common Objections

"Your expectations are above our budget."

Respond: "What's the best you can offer, considering my experience?"

"We can't go higher now but will revisit in 6 months."

Ask for written guarantees or a performance-based raise clause.

Stay Professional & Positive

Avoid ultimatums unless prepared to walk away.

Express enthusiasm: "I'm excited about this role and hope we can find a mutually beneficial number."

Get the Final Offer in Writing

Ensure all agreed terms (salary, bonuses, benefits) are documented.

Practice Your Delivery

Rehearse with a friend or mentor to sound confident, not aggressive.

Bonus: Scripts for Negotiation

Initial Response:

"Based on my research and experience, I was expecting a range of [X–Y]. Does that align with your budget?"

Counteroffer:

"I appreciate the offer. Given my [specific skills/achievements], could we explore [higher number/additional benefits]?"